Good evening.

Security arrangements for trial courts and the appellate courts are at the discretion of the individual court, the city or county in which they sit, or the building's landlord.

The Supreme Court does not have or maintain any records related to arrangements for other courts. The only court for which the Supreme Court would have information is itself, and the Supreme Court does not have a contract with a security corporation.

The Court of Appeals, Divisions I and II, do not have contracts with a security corporation.

The Court of Appeals, Division III, does have a contract with a security corporation. The contract is attached. Under General Court Rule 31.1, some information is not disclosable and has been redacted from the document.

Jan,

Good evening; there must be some sort of Contract between a Security Corporation and The Supreme Court of Washington; and OUR Appellate Courts.

There is a Security Guard when OUR Constitutionally Guaranteed and Protected Court Systems aren't Unconstitutionally Closed to the Public Per U.S. Const. Amend. I (September 17, 1787).

Every District Court here has a Security Corporation that sits at the door and verifies the safety of the People Within The Court.

Please continue and provide the correct information. Thank you!
